The IHFA is a lending institute geared toward assisting with the financing of home mortgages and the development of rental properties. Income eligibility is determined on a county-by-county basis. For a 1 or 2 person family, income levels can range from $46,000 to $62,000. For 3 member or larger families, eligible income levels range from $53,000 to $64,000. No state taxes are utilized for the IHFA since all funding is handled through local banks and mortgage companies.

“The way to have good and safe government, is not to trust it all to one,
but to divide it among the many, distributing to every one exactly the functions he is competent to (perform).”

Indiana Office of the Utility Consumer Counselor

The OUCC is your unofficial representative in matters regarding the regulated industries of electricity, gas, telephone, water and sewer. This office promotes the views of utility customers when utility companies apply to change rates, service new areas or deregulate. The charge of the OUCC is to promote the best service at the lowest cost reasonably possible.

Indiana Rural Development Council

The IRDC is a combination of profit and not-for-profit organizations committed to meeting the economic and social needs of Indiana's rural communities. As an advocate of rural Indiana, the IRDC encourages partnerships between organizations at the local, state and federal levels. Member agencies and organizations of the IRDC are assisted in identifying and solving local housing, communication and environmental problems.

Once only used as a means of registering births and deaths, this department now investigates health and safety concerns on behalf of all Hoosiers. In addition, the state health commissioner has administrative responsibility for Silvercrest Children's Development Center, Indiana School for the Deaf, Indiana School for the Blind, Soldiers' and Sailors' Children's Home and the Indiana Veterans' Home. The Department of Health is also still the office that holds the complete records for immunizations and diseases, and marriage, birth and death certificates.

To raise and educate the awareness of infant mortality,
The Department of Health now offers an "Heirloom Birth Certificate."
The proceeds go toward infant mortality programs.

Indiana State Police

Although most people only think of the State Police as they are watching out for “troopers” on the highway, the Indiana State Police Department serves many purposes. Its primary jurisdiction for traffic control is interstates, highways and state roads. However, state police do assist local police, upon request, with crime investigations. In addition, they are sponsors of a variety of public programs, such as Summer Youth Camps and Project Hoosier Safe-T.

SEMA has been combined with the Department of Fire and Building Services (DFBS) and the Public Safety Training Institute (PSTI) to provide public safety services to Hoosiers. They seek to minimize the effects of a disaster by taking the necessary steps before and after a disaster occurs. Responsibilities of the consolidated agency include emergency management, emergency medical services, building safety and fire protection as well as professional training.

State Information Center

If you need a starting point or quick answer as you are attempting to work through the maze of state government, the State Information Center may be able to help. The office is available to answer questions by phone Monday through Friday from 8 a.m to 5 p.m. If the State Information Center cannot directly answer your questions, it is their responsibility to find out who can.

Originally created as the State Veterinarian Office to prevent and suppress contagious and infectious diseases among livestock, the Board of Animal Health has greatly expanded over the last hundred years. It continues its original mission, but it now also protects public health by controlling the spread of animal diseases, maintaining a vital link in a safe food supply, and assisting people and their animals that are victims of large scale natural disasters. This office works closely with veterinarians, farmers, the U.S. Department of Agriculture veterinarians, and other states' animal health officials to monitor the health status of all animals crossing Indiana's borders.

Indiana is home to the nation's first statewide emergency response network for animal owners. During a flood or tornado, The Board of Animal Health's State Annex for Veterinary Emergencies (SAVE) is prepared to respond.

Indiana Secretary of State

Another of Indiana's statewide elected officials, the Secretary of State and staff are primarily responsible for two areas: elections and business. They are responsible for assisting the Indiana Election Division to oversee candidate declarations, certifying election results, and maintaining campaign finance reports. On the business end, the office is in charge of chartering new businesses, filing commercial liens, and the issuance of trademarks, notaries public, and summonses. Another responsibility for the Secretary of State is overseeing Indiana's securities industry. They are charged with protecting Indiana investors by bringing enforcement actions against companies and individuals selling securities in violation of Indiana law.

Worker's Compensation Board of Indiana

Whenever an employee is injured on the job, questions arise about how that individual will maintain a quality of life for themselves and their families. Most times, employers have a good policy to assist the injured employee. However, there are times when conflicts arise between employers and employees. The Worker's Compensation Board exists to help mediate any conflicts when a work-related accident occurs. In 1991, the Indiana Worker's Compensation and Occupational Diseases Acts were put into place. The legislature, labor, businesses and the medical community worked together to develop the laws.

Indiana Department of Transportation

Because Indiana is the “Crossroads of America”, it is important for this state agency to provide a safe and efficient transportation network. Maintaining Indiana’s state highway system is only one responsibility of INDOT. The department is also involved with oversight of airports, railroads, bicycle and pedestrian trails, and historic preservation of covered bridges. In winter, INDOT is responsible for clearing state roadways, and in better weather is responsible for fixing the roadways damaged by the inclement weather. Indiana State Transportation maps are available from INDOT at no charge.

Testing drivers, licensing drivers and vehicles, and titling vehicles are the top priorities for the BMV. Working primarily through license branches spread throughout Indiana's 92 counties, the BMV titles and licenses all types of vehicles, from cars and trucks to watercraft. The BMV is working on reducing the burdensome lines many people experience at their licensing branches by automating a number of their services. Renewing your driver's license can now be done by phone or on the computer. Contact the BMV for further details.

Indiana Department of Administration

The Department of Administration assures that state government functions properly and has all of the tools necessary to serve the public. The management and maintenance of all state-owned buildings and facilities is the responsibility of this agency. In addition, whenever another state agency is in need of equipment, the Department of Administration is the first place to look.

Indiana Economic Development Corporation

The Indiana Economic Development Corporation (IEDCorp.) is a public/private partnership which replaced the Department of Commerce as the entity to plan and implement Indiana's economic development efforts. The membership of the IEDCorp. consists of twelve board members, including the Governor who serves as chair and eleven others he appoints. In addition, an advisory council, which is mandated to include representatives from local economic development organizations throughout the state, assists the IEDCorp. board in their efforts. Other members of the advisory council consist of representatives from a variety of geographic regions and industries throughout the state.

Indiana State Department of Agriculture

The Indiana State Department of Agriculture will change how state government views agricultural needs for Indiana. Lt. Governor Becky Skillman holds the position of Secretary of Agriculture and Rural Development. The Secretary of Agriculture and Rural Development, and the Director of Agriculture have positions on the Governor's Cabinet, allowing us to have an advocate for agriculture at the table during discussions with the Governor. This will elevate Indiana agriculture sector and improve how the state approaches and executes agriculture policies.

Previously, the many different state commissions and agencies dealing with agriculture were scattered within state government. With all areas now in one department, it will streamline the advocacy of agriculture consolidating current agencies and their budgets to enhance efficiency as well as improve agricultural advocacy with state government.
